Scholarship committee will be more inclined to look favorably on your request if you’re applying to reputable, accredited schools with high graduation rates. You’ll also need to develop clearly defined career goals supported by excellent grades to assure the scholarship committee that your vision is achievable. Prepare to explain why you’re passionate about your chosen academic discipline. Scholarship committees will also be impressed if you have selfless reasons for pursuing a degree, such as a desire to make a difference in the world or discover a cure for diseases.
IDENTIFY PROSPECTIVE SCHOLARSHIPS

Search on university scholarships that that match your criteria such as; amount of money, duration, degree, field. Identify those scholarships currently open for applications, and review the requirements to apply.

You can apply for as many scholarships as you are eligible for so it is important to assure you have enough time to apply to as many as you want.

Many of them will probably have an online application system, complete your profile, including general questions used for all applications. Some scholarships may require you to answer more specific questions. Upload your support documentation (support documentation may include previous grades, proof of achievements and personal identification documents) and preview your application before submitting.

When you have completed your application, click ‘Submit’. This is a silly step but many times it is forgotten. Many times after you submit your application you will receive an email to confirm your application has been submitted successfully. If you are unsure whether if your application went in you can contact their administration office to verify your submission. All applicants are notified of the outcome of their application via the email address provided.

Ensure your completed application is submitted by the due date. Late applications usually will not be accepted or reviewed.

If the scholarship comes from corporation, take your time to contact corporations that offer scholarships, such as large accounting firms if you’re an accounting major. Members of your family may also know about contacts who might also be useful. Ask family members, neighbors and teachers for introductions to potential scholarships. Research organizations that fund students with backgrounds similar to yours. If your family is in a low-income bracket, you may wish to apply to the College Sponsorship Program, for example. Some international students find sponsors through government agencies in their country, such as the Saudi Scholarship Program. Sponsors of international students must submit a notarized statement and official documentation attesting that they have sufficient assets to pay the student’s cost of attendance.
Introducing yourself and your plans. Stress your accomplishments and unique personal qualities. Explain your reasons for needing a scholarship, and describe how a degree will be life changing. Indicate what you hope to achieve after graduating from college. Scholarships committees want evidence of resilience, so share examples of how you’ve successfully met challenges in life, such as maintaining good grades while caring for siblings during a parent’s illness.
Spelling and grammar errors can cause your letter to be discarded without consideration. After correcting mistakes, ask your English teacher to critique your writing and offer suggestions. Include a resume that includes your GPA, work experience, extracurricular activities, volunteerism, leadership roles, research, awards and any special recognition. Print your letter on quality paper and affix the correct postage.
If you don’t hear from the committees, contact them by phone or email. Offer to meet in person to discuss your funding request in greater detail. If the sponsor wishes you well but isn’t able to financially support you, ask for names of other potential sponsors. Promptly mail a thank you note after the scholarship committee takes out time to review your information. If you’re successful in finding a scholarship, discuss details, and provide regular progress reports throughout your college years. Invite your sponsor to your graduation.
